

What is an Evidence-Informed Educator?

An evidence-informed educator is someone who:

- is committed to continued learning and growth
- is guided by the wide, deep, and evolving body of research on how children learn
- understands that instruction is a controllable factor that is critical to student success.
- creates safe and supportive learning environments for ourselves, our students, and our colleagues
- celebrates the courage it takes to change beliefs and practices
- always puts students first

How can this series be used?

This series is designed to be:

- a launching point for anyone in education.
- a group of simple visuals or one-page summaries to get learning started.
- not an exhaustive or absolute collection. We must be prepared for and willing to embrace new learning as the research evolves.

Who can use this series?

For anyone looking to share knowledge about evidence-informed practice including:

- Educators looking to improve their own practice.
- Instructional Coaches to enhance professional learning.
- Principals to initiate and sustain school-wide change in instruction.
- District Leadership to embed impactful change across systems.
- Parents advocating for their children and communities on the importance of evidence-informed instruction.
